M. de Bernage in his of the 26th of June writes, that all Preparations were made for the general Quarantain, and for the airing of Houſhold Goods and Merchandizes; and that every thing was ſo diſpoſed, that by the Help of the Money which he had furniſhed, the Duke de Roquelaure's Orders would be executed with the utmoſt Exactneſs. The Diſinfection, or Perfuming, of all the Houſes where the Diſtemper had been, was performed and even repeated in all the Towns and Places, the Goods depoſited in the Warehouſes had likewiſe been aired according to his firſt Inſtructions, thoſe of the Town of Mende excepted, which had not yet been touched, becauſe it was the laſt Place the Plague ſtopt at. It was confirmed, that there was none ſick of the Contagion throughout the Gevaudan. Alais continued well, the Quarantain there will be performed with all Regularity, for which nothing was wanting either in that or the other Dioceſſes. M. de Grand Maiſon writes the 21ſt and 23d of June, that on the 22d the Territory of Marſeilles had not for ſix Days together had any taken ſick in it, and it was hoped the Diſtemper had ceaſed there. The Towns were in perfect Health. M. de Belrieu writes the 25th of June, that he had Intelligence Avignon was ſtill in a bad State, and that the Contagion had newly ſpread into its Territory. Orange and its Diſtrict had from Time to Time ſome taken ſick, but great Hopes were entertained from the good Order which is obſerved there. He had an Account from Avignon, dated the 22d, that eight or 10 a-Day were taken ill, and as many died there, without reckoning thoſe in the Baſtides and Farm-Houſes in that Neighbourhood.
